May 4, 5, and 6th Episode Narrative

Northwesterly flow set up over the region. Numerous disturbances moved through the northwest flow and touched off thunderstorms. Some storms became severe and numerous reports of wind, rain, and hail were received. In Mansfield, in southern Tarrant County, an F1 tornado was observed and caused damage to many homes and structures. Additional tornadoes were observed in Johnson and Bosque Counties. Over the course of the next few days most locations received at least some rain...but amounts varied depending on location. Additional upper level disturbances resulted in more thunderstorms over the course of the weekend as well.

May 28th Episode Narrative

A strong cold front moved across north Texas from the central plains. This front, coupled with upper level disturbances and a mesoscale convective system, produced widespread rain and severe thunderstorms over north Texas. Strong winds were reported along the leading edge of this system, and they affected many locales. Wind was the major impact from this system, but some areas did receive large hail and practically everyone in the region recorded measurable rainfall, which was welcome in most areas.

May 30, 31 Episode Narrative

Additional thunderstorms developed in northwest flow. Most storms were confined to the area north of a Breckenridge to Cooper line. However some heavy rain was reported along a Granbury, Cleburne, Tyler line. This event was not as widespread as the previous one, but again strong wind was the main occurrence. Large hail and flash flooding were reported in some areas as well.
